What games -- these gulls -- play in the heavy-handed wind whistling bodies a sluggish pull

graped against naked air have nothing or have offerings to your thick tangle, your transient sky rest upon the damp darkened earth drink in the depth of shade and muted light as pines do, huddled blinking in